THE new postal money orders will soon be issused. In the new system there will be no complication. Sheets will be issued calling for amounts from 1 cent to $3, which can be torn off to suit the purchaser. The postmaster will have no writing to do on it and the sender will simply indorse it the same as he would a check or a draft. One cent will pay the charges for any amount up to $3.

IF, as now seems probable, Vice Admiral Sir George Tryon acknowledged that the sinking of the Victoria and the drowning of hundreds of men was "all his fault." his calmness in going to the bottom with his ship is quite intelligible. But his action in signaling the boats which put off for rescue to go back to their ships is not compatible with any theory of sanity. The man had just come from the sick list; his mind was foggy and uncertain and its temporary aberration cost his country hundreds of precious lives, of which his own was the most valuable. It is a question if the ship's surgeon is not the person to be held responsible for the disaster.

Brave Marshal Murphy.

Those people who are out, tomahawk in hand, looking for Marshal Murphy's scalp, might just as well go off and die at once. The ladies are with him. The board ofl ady managers of the World's fair voted to present medals to Fire Marshal Murphy and his companions who so gallantly rescued Capt. Fitzpatrick from the flames of the cold storage building.

Marshal Murphy exemplified his bravery again Thursday night when he led the way up the steel frame work of the Manufactures building at the World's fair to the dizzy height of 250 feet and extinguished a fire that had caught in the canvas awnings.

The Banks All Right.

Not only is Iowa all right viewed at from an agricultural standpoint. but it is all right financially. No man understands these things better than Comptreller Eckles, whose bus- jah of Ulwar. iness is to know all about the condition of the national banks, and just before his departure from Washington to New York, he said to a correspondent of the Des Moines Leader:

"The people themselves are often to blame for disastrous bank failures," continued the comptroller. "If courage and self-control were always exercised by all classes of business men and by those having dealings with banking institutions in times like those which we have been going through there would be no need of the failures of any legitimate banking institutions. Let the people exercise a little reason - deposit rather than withdraw funds-and what a rare thing a bank failure would be. Fortunately the prospects brighten from day to day, and the era of stringency is nearly passed. The people of the west will earliest feel the vivifying hand of prosperity, for when crops begin to move money will flow in that direction in large quantities.

Wheelmen in Politics.

The riders of wheels all over the country are talking of entering municipal politics to see what they can do for the making of better streets and roads and the enforcement of the laws relating to the use of streets. A prominent wheelman says that in Louisville they are organizing for a fight on this question, and they expect to win. Only a few weeks ago in St. Louis the wheelmen of that city revolutionized the entire city government by taking part in the city election. They elected the mayor, 27 out of 29 members of the assembly, and every member of the city council. For years they have been petitioning the powers for good streets and clean streets and a relief from the excessive street flooding by the sprinkling monopoly. They asked nothing except what every good citizen recognized as just and right. But their requests were laughed at and ignored. Then they went at the matter in a systematic way. A few months before the election a meeting was held and an organization perfected. It took the character of a gigantic club, and every bicycle rider in the city became a member. "Clean streets" was the platform, and it was popular. Every candidate, from mayor down, was asked to state in writing his views on the question, and those whose pledges were the most satisfactory were placed on the wheelman's ticket. Election day came, and just two out of nearly 50 candidates on the ticket indorsed by the wheelmen were defeated. It was a clean sweep. Politics cut no figure in the fight.

ONLY A ROGUS OBELISK.

The Professional Liar of the Bridge Poses as "Mr. Vanderbilt."

One young woman was a stranger in the city, the other had been here once before. One was a blonde, the other a brunette. They were standing on the platform at the New York tower of the bridge. The blonde was telling her companion what little she knew and much more that she didn't know about the city's sights. Near them stood a tall man of the masher variety. He was playing the ignoble part of eavesdropper, says the New York Advertiser.

"Now, Ruth, that is the Egyptian obelisk." said the blonde, pointing toward the well-known shot tower in the lower part of the city.

"Is that so? You don't mean that brown, shaft-like thing over there?" "Yes, that's Cleopatra's needle, dear, and it was brought over here at great expense by generous Mr. Vanderbilt. Wasn't it real good of him?" "It isn't worth mentioning, ladies," interrupted the masher, suddenly stepping forward. "Anybody, if they had had the means, would have done just the same as I did. It's a mere trifle and I would be glad to do it again any day.

"Why!" exclaimed the young woman in amazement, "are you Mr. Vanderbilt?"

"At your service, ladies, replied the masher, with a low, sweeping

Although the fair creatures looked incredulous they began to question him about the famous relic, and kept the impudent fellow busy giving alleged information.

"Well," finally said the blonde impetuously, what are those tiny windows for "Lady," was the cool response, "those are not windows; they are air-holes. Egyptians had to breathe just the same as anybody else.

In despair the young women looked inquiringly toward a near-by policeman and he came to their re-

"I happened to overhear your conversation, ladies, so I'll take the trouble to say that that is not an obelisk, at all; it's simply a shot tower.

Crestfallen and abashed the bogus Mr. Vanderbilt walked away. The young women had met the professional liar of the bridge.

A MEDIÆVAL MURDER.

The Prime Minister of a Native Indian State Slain.

The story of the murder of the prime minister of the native state of Ulwar, in Northwestern India, reads more like a tale from the criminal annals of some mediæval Italian principality than a record of the present The minister was murdered while out riding by a gang of assisins. The inquiry ordered by the Indian government has resulted not only in the conviction of one of the principal military officers of the Ulwar state, but in a declaration by the court that the murder was executed by order of the late mahara-

It appears that this personage, desiring for sundry reasons to have the minister 'removed," confided the task to the officer commanding the imperial service troops-that is, the force which the Ulwar state undertakes to send into the field should the Indian government call for its services. This worthy got together a gang of men, including some of his own soldiers, waylaid the minister, and, while some of the party patrolled the road, others-as one of them who turned queen's evidence expressed it - "used their swords." They pleaded in defense that they were obliged to carry out the orders of the maharajah in committing the act. The court held that such orders had been given, but decided that they constituted no defense, and sentenced two of the party to death and others to various terms of penal servitude. Adequately to appreciate this affair, it should be remembered that Ulwar is no wild hill state on the outer confines of India, but an ancient principality in the heart of the country, within a short distance of Delhi. The late maharajah had received an English education, and Ulwar is in many respects accounted an excellently administered state.

WHY THEY SUCCEED.

The remakable success which the Scott Medical Institute has achieved in every department of its practice has created a good deal of comment. not only among the people who are afflicted with chronic diseases, but also among brother practitioners and the question is often asked "What is the cause of this large measure of success?" The answer may be stated in a few words. In the first place the physicians of the Scott Medical Institute are skilled

In the second place they give their whole time to their patients and to their profession. When they are not in the consultation room in attendance upon their patients, they are discussing the peculiar features of individual cases, so that they may be ready to apply the result of their deliberations in the consulting room. This is the whole secret of their
